

The Next Stage

We are awaiting details from AHVLA on how we progress to the next stage which is validation. Validation will involve testing on fecal and nasal samples from live camels. As soon as we have these details we will arrange a meeting with BCL and BLS who have generously donated to this study to discuss the way forward.

Publication of the full trial results is in preparation and this study will be peer reviewed* before it is published. As soon as it is published we will again send it to those that donated to this project first.

Camelid Tb Support and Research Group

* Peer review is a system used by scientists to decide which research results should be published in a scientific journal. The peer review process subjects scientific research papers to independent scrutiny by other qualified scientific experts (peers) before they are made public.